

In probably most cases, individuals and families who have one or two rentals must depend on that income, many being seniors on fixed incomes themselves. That rent is essential in order to not only properly upkeep those homes but for keeping owners supported. That rental income is often money for food, gas, expenses and medical care and in too many cases an unsupported absence of those payments will cause the owners to lose the property. More landlords depend on that income than have the luxury of it being simply an 'investment'. This MUST be part of any package of relief.

Diane Binnings
Eugene Oregon