The costs of elections are borne variously by the state, counties, cities and other governmental subdivisions. The distribution of election costs is dependent on whether the election is a primary or general election, or special election. Other specific dates are available to local jurisdictions in both even- and odd-numbered years for local issues.

Although the even-year general election is a state election, counties are responsible for the costs of printing, distributing and counting ballots cast by electors within their county boundaries. Reimbursement for pro rata costs are collected only from education or other special districts which have placed local option or bond issues on the ballot. The state does not reimburse any costs; cities are exempt by statute.

The Secretary of State reports that the state's plan adopted under the Help America Vote Act (HAVA) and the 2007-09 budget for federal HAVA funds do not include the processes proposed by HB 3270 A-Engrossed. There may be federal requirements for hand-count auditing in the future but it is not known when that would occur, or whether federal funding would be provided.
