This bill requires the Oregon Lottery to hold lottery prizes in excess of $600 when the prizewinners are listed in a database of delinquent and liquidated court accounts.

The Oregon Judicial Department (OJD) examined 5 months worth of lottery winners and compared the list against their database of delinquent and liquidated accounts to establish a baseline of the amount they could reasonably expect to garnish. OJD anticipates being able to intercept $15,600 per month. The amounts collected will be distributed according to statute. Some of the amounts identified by OJD may be intercepted by the Department of Justice, Child Support Division thereby decreasing the amount intercepted by OJD. The Child Support Division holds precedent over OJD and OJD’s estimate has taken into account, as best they can, the amount that would be intercepted by the Child Support Division. Current economic conditions may also affect the total amount OJD is able to intercept. In addition, OJD anticipates needing to expend $50,000 for programming expenses to change the program used to look up debtors without using the social security number.

The Oregon State Lottery (OSL) will have one-time costs of $18,906 for computer programming charges and per transaction costs of $152 per intercept. These total costs are reflected as OJD expenditures. By law, OSL cannot pay costs that are not directly related to gaming activities. For this reason, all expenses associated with the intercept of amounts owed to OJD will be paid by OJD out of the OJD Collections Account. Since there is an emergency clause in this bill, there is a chance that some of the expenditures and revenues could be realized in the current biennium.
