

I can see this as a benefit for farm workers but what about other undocumented people who would use it to get benefits or something else. One wreck I had years ago was with a person who was it was found out undocumented but had got a drivers license but had no insurance. So unless you are going to be able for DMV workers to prove these are farm workers and they are insured I believe it will just be another problem. Plus undocumented workers arent going to get temporary drivers license with their correct address because then the authorities could pick them up and send them back. You I believe are just opening a can of worms.

Maureen Torres