Dear House Revenue Committee members,

I am the Executive Director of Family Building Blocks, Family Building Blocks is a private, nonprofit organization that works to break the intergenerational cycle of child abuse and neglect by providing services for high-risk families that have children six weeks to five years old. We are the Crisis Relief Nursery serving Marion & Polk Counties.

We focus on building successful and resilient children, strengthening parents, and preserving families through comprehensive and integrated early childhood and family support services. We served over 1,100 children in 2012, and 99% of those children were able to remain living safely with their parents, avoiding the trauma of abuse, neglect, and foster care.

I submit this letter into Public Comment in opposition of HB2456-2 and any other bill that threatens the Oregon Charitable Deduction tax incentive. The goal of this bill, we assume, is to raise additional tax revenue for the state.

The negative effect of losing the charitable contribution deduction would be significant. It has been a longstanding incentive for donors to give to charities and there is extensive data, experience in other states, as well as our own observation to show that the tax deduction increases charitable giving.

Limiting or ending charitable deductions will harm charities, the people they serve, and the quality of life in our communities. Accordingly, we oppose any reduction in deductions for charitable contributions included in HB2456-2 and similar bills.

Nonprofit organizations, along with other private and public institutions, are key threads in the social fabric of our communities. Nonprofits contribute a wide variety of benefits to society. They are often the only source of essential services to Oregon's most vulnerable citizens – those who are homeless, hungry, disabled, victims of domestic violence and abuse, veterans, seniors and children. Nonprofits also promote arts and culture and protect and restore the environment. Their works reflect the values of all Oregonians.

Although funding sources vary by mission and organization, private contributions of cash, volunteer time and in-kind goods and services comprise part – or all - of every charity's budget. A majority of nonprofit organizations in our community do not receive government funding and would be devastated by the loss of charitable donations from high income individuals who contribute generously to improve the quality of life in our community.

Over the last four years of economic distress nonprofits have struggled to meet increasing demand for services even as donations have dropped off. Nonprofits, just like the people and communities they serve, are striving to do more with less. And like the people they serve, many nonprofits are stretched to the limit and unable to meet the needs of those people they care so passionately about.

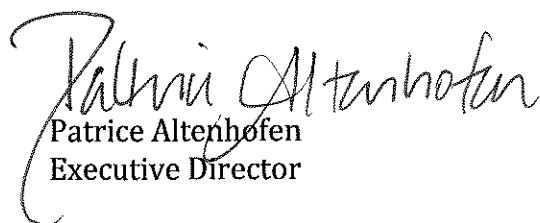

Regardless of how much of an organization's budget consists of private donations, such donations are more flexible than grant funding, allowing nonprofits to be dynamic and respond quickly to immediate needs. In addition, showing community investment is almost universally required for nonprofits to compete for grant funds. The measure of community investment? Local donations. Family Building Blocks relies on nearly $2 million in private dollars annually.

In other words, the charitable giving deduction is not just another tax loophole – it is a critical component of the nonprofit funding system. Proposed state and federal tax code changes to eliminate or weaken charitable giving fail to account for this.

If such changes are enacted, they will greatly reduce the ability of nonprofits to meet critical and beneficial community needs and causes. That would inevitably lead to greater dependence on government safety net services and shift the cost burden onto the state, which will more than offset any increase in revenue.

Again, we hope that you will join us in opposing any limitation on charitable deductions.

Respectfully,

Patrice Altenhofen
Executive Director
