OREGONITE

A Beautiful and Unusual Stone

OREGONITE is a beautiful opaque gem stone which defies description except for its unique markings.

This distinctive marking occurs in the form of a flower distributed throughout the stone. It is caused by nodules varying in size and color, and where ever they are intersected in polishing the flower appears.

The coloring is always gorgeous, shading through pink, red and brown to almost black, marked with these nearly round splashes which resemble the Shirley Poppy with its white or creamy edging, and its wide variety of markings, makes each stone a distinctive individual specimen. This fact, of course, makes it a wonderful souvenir of this locality, but Oregonite needs no special boast to make it the most popular genuine stone in modern jewelry.
