ISSUES DISCUSSED:EFFECT OF COMMITTEE AMENDMENT:

BACKGROUND: Senate Bill 270 (2013) established institutional boards for Portland State University and University of Oregon and allowed Oregon State University the option to establish a board, which it later chose to exercise. The measure provided that boards must include one student as a voting member. House Bill 4147 specifies that, for universities with graduate programs, the board must include both undergraduate and graduate students as voting members.

Senate Bill 270 (2013) also provided the Governor with the power to remove any appointed member of a governing board for cause after notice and public hearing with the stipulation that not more than three members may be removed within a period of four years, except in cases of corrupt conduct in office. House Bill 4147 adds provisions requiring the Governor to conduct a formal review on whether to remove a member of a governing board whose ability to serve is questioned by a two-thirds vote of both the university's student senate and its faculty senate.

Senate Bill 242 (2011) created the Higher Education Coordinating Commission (HECC) and provided that its membership include one student from a public university and one student from a community college. House Bill 4147 specifies that, in addition to a community college student, the HECC must include one student from Oregon State University, Portland State University or University of Oregon and one student from Eastern Oregon University, Oregon Institute of Technology, Southern Oregon University or Western Oregon University.
