Ms. Raszka:

I was appalled to hear that the State of Oregon is considering passage of legislation forbidding, among other things, ever protecting the grey wolf. I hope that this wrong headed legislation is not under consideration.

There is no data whatsoever that wolves are a danger to people or other than occasional farm animals, for whom a less draconian solution can be found. There has never been a documented fatal attack by a wolf upon a person in North America, and only a handful worldwide.

I can only assume that these bills are the result of efforts by persons and or organizations with a narrow economic interest in the maintenance or expansion of the status quo where policy supports farming an no other land use considerations. The interests of a wider group of citizens should be considered before Oregon continues to blindly support policies that degrade our environment.

Thanks and Best Regards,

Carl Henriksen
