BACKGROUND:

In 1998, Oregon voters approved Ballot Measure 67, which allowed medical use of marijuana in Oregon within specified limits. It also established a state-controlled permit system. In December 1998, the Oregon Legislature passed Measure 67 into law. The law, known as the Oregon Medical Marijuana Act which provides legal protections for qualified patients, requires a physician-written statement of the patient's qualifying debilitating medical condition, allows for a caregiver to provide assistance, and mandates a registration system under the direction of the Oregon Health Authority.
