

Questions for Jeff Rhoads of Gov. Brown's office and Andre Ourso of the OHA

- The new draft rules that have come out of the RAC confused some participants of the RAC. It seemed that very little of the policy in the new rules was discussed by the RAC prior to the first draft of rules being presented to the group. Clearly the policies in the new rules didn't come from members of the RAC, so where did it come from?
- When 26% of concentrates are failing for unsafe levels of contaminants, why would the OHA and the Governor's office want to shift to random testing that would only pick up less than one percent of concentrate products?
 - It seems like the solution that the OHA has come up with is to simply stop testing.
- It seems that these rules have been developed to benefit some in the industry who haven't been able to produce a clean product. Have you considered the long-term implications of these rules on the businesses who are attempting to get it right?
 - Have you considered how recalls would negatively impact the industry overall?
 - Have you considered how Oregonians falling ill will impact the industry?
