I'm a homeowner and my parents are landlords, so structurally I should be on the side of landlords. My folks have had addicted tenants they've had to evict, or even should have evicted sooner than they did. But they did so with cause. They don't evict people just to raise rents. And they are not bleeding hearts about it--in my opinion they sometimes overcharge. And they do well financially. They, and we, have no need for no-cause eviction. And we as a society owe stability to the least powerful among us.
