Total Funds	$21,935,787	$26,218,410

Analysis:

House Bill 3364 with the -1 amendment changes provisions related to temporary assistance for needy families for families who are victims of domestic violence to require the Department of Human Services (DHS) to maintain emergency assistance eligibility and payment limits for victims of domestic violence at no less than $3,000 for a consecutive six-month period.

The Department of Human Services calculates the cost of raising this rate to $3,000 to comply with the requirements of this bill to be approximately $21,935,787 General Fund for the 2017-19 biennium, and $26,218,410 General Fund for the 2019-21 biennium. DHS reports that currently an individual can get assistance of up to $1,200 every 90 days, or $2,400 in a 6-month period. These calculations assume an October 2017 implementation date, and reflects the incremental increase in cost per case based on the current average forecasted caseload. The agency's cost estimate is also based on 100% of that monthly average caseload (1,217 clients) obtaining financial assistance from the program; this level of participation is significantly higher than under the current program where only 23% of the caseload is receiving payments. The drop in purchasing power of $1,200 over time has been cited as one reason for waning participation, which has been declining in recent biennia.
