BACKGROUND:

In 2015, San Francisco implemented the nation's first set of work scheduling protections. In 2016, Seattle became the second city in the country to pass a comprehensive set of scheduling policies for retail and food service workers. The City of Emeryville, California has adopted fair workweek regulations. The State of Connecticut has also considered predictive work scheduling legislation.

During the 2015 legislative session, the Oregon Legislative Assembly's House Committee on Business and Labor heard House Bill 2010 and House Bill 3377 Related to predictive work scheduling. Although neither measure passed out of committee, a work group was subsequently formed which held meetings throughout the 2016 interim to discuss proposed policies regarding predictive scheduling and to receive input from San Francisco and Seattle city officials and an academic researcher.

Senate Bill 828-A establishes the Fair Work Week Act, which provides scheduling standards for hourly workers at large retail, food service, and hospitality establishments. The measure requires certain employers with 100 or more employees in the state to provide good faith estimates of employees' work schedules, 14-days advanced written

The measure also establishes notice and rulemaking requirements for employers and prohibits employers from engaging in a systematic pattern or practice of significant under-scheduling.

Senate Bill 828-A provides the following exceptions to requirements for predictability pay:

- Employee mutually agrees with another employee to employee-initiated work shift swaps or coverage;
- Employer requests an employee to work additional hours because another employee failed to provide timely notice of unavailability;
- Employee consents to work additional hours consecutive to the employee's current work shift to address present and unanticipated customer needs;
- Employee requests changes to his or her work schedule, and the employer documents the request in writing;
- Employer subtracts hours from an employee's work schedule for disciplinary reasons for just cause;
- Employee's work shift or on-call shift cannot continue due to threats to employees or property or due to recommendation of a public official;
- Operations cannot begin or continue due to problems with public utilities or sewer system; and
- Operations cannot begin or continue due to natural disaster or similar cause not within employer's control.

Senate Bill 828-A permits a worker who asserts a violation to file a complaint with the Oregon Bureau of Labor and Industries (BOLI) or file a civil action. BOLI may assess a statutory penalty payable to the aggrieved party that is $500 for first violation and $1,000 for subsequent violations. Senate Bill 828-A extends the preemption of local laws that regulate employee work schedules until July 2, 2022.
