Rules Committee,

The Electoral College is an institution established in 1787 when the country was in its infancy. Things have changed. In modern times, when the loser of the popular vote for the presidency (by a large margin) can win the electoral vote, something's wrong. I prefer the old democratic motto "one man, one vote," which means every vote counts. The populations on coasts or sparsely populated states would seem irrelevant. Everyone votes, majority wins.
