BACKGROUND:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 2 honors the achievements of four outstanding women for their leadership, achievements and service to Oregon. At the 32nd annual Oregon Commission for Women's (OCFW) Women of Achievement Awards in March 2016, OCFW honored Jan Campbell, Donna Maxey, Kay D. Toran, and Gwendolyn Trice for their work improving the lives of women in Oregon.

Jan Campbell is an advocate and educator who works to improve the needs of people with disabilities within the Portland community. Specifically, Ms. Campbell has worked with local, regional, and state entities to expand opportunities for the elderly and people with disabilities, and has also contributed to several projects at OHSU training persons with disabilities on improving their clinical care, and co-facilitating cognitive behavioral therapy groups for women with physical disabilities suffering from depression. Additionally, Ms. Campbell has chaired the TriMet Committee on Accessible Transportation and provides perspectives to the discussion of policy issues regarding mobility and independence for transit dependent individuals.

Donna Maxey is a Portland community leader who works to build collaborative relationships and promote diversity within the community. Ms. Maxey developed the non-profit RACE TALKS: Uniting to Break the Chains of Racism – An Opportunity for Dialogue, to cultivate a safe space for community discussions on issues surrounding race. Ms. Maxey has collaborated with the Portland Public Schools, the Albina Ministerial Alliance and the Portland Police Bureau to create RACE TALKS 2, a program that works with Jefferson High School students on community-police relationships.

Kay D. Toran is the President and Chief Executive Officer of Volunteers of America Oregon, a major human services agency that provides treatment, developmental, and prevention services to vulnerable children, single adults, families and seniors in the community through an integrated medical and social services model. Her career history includes positions within the government and academic sectors, and her volunteer service includes board membership on Albina Community Bank, the University of Portland Board of Regents and the Oregon Community Foundation. Ms. Toran is known for her mentorship and guidance of young professionals.

Gwendolyn Trice founded the non-profit Maxville Heritage Interpretive Center in Wallowa County after documenting her family's history and migration to Oregon from the Midwest as African American loggers in the early 1900's. Ms. Trice's work has uncovered the history of logging communities, the ethnic minority workers, and the women who have played a role in Oregon history. Ms. Tice's work showcases the multicultural history of rural eastern Oregon in
