

Reflecting on Art Week 2017

May Street Elementary

As soon as Mr. Foster blew into his flute, the entire class fell silent. He mesmerized, almost hypnotized, us. He sang a tribal song, beat his drum, and truly expressed himself. If everyone on Earth could hear that, I feel the world would be a much better place. Mr. Foster expressed his tribe, his family, but most importantly, his soul.

I learned that Native Americans still have a good grip on ancient traditions. I fully appreciate the hypothesis that all students should learn about the Native Americans.

Sincerely,
Sylvia

What I learned and enjoy in artweek of 2017.

When Mr. Foster played the flute I could tell how much he honored his people and culture. He played so well my talking class and I were under a trance. When he told a story I could listen to it over and over again all day all night.

I loved how Ms. Pamela had so much Creativity in her mind. She told my class these words "you are always an artist in your own special way" and I will cherish those words for life. My class made a diorama of native american animals habitat.

I did a blue whale and its habitat. In the beginning of our last day we got to see every body's fantastic work. Then we heard Mr. Foster play the flute and drum.

I hope every school in Oregon every kid can have this experience and learn what I learned from Ms. Pamela and Mr. Foster.

I enjoyed that we got to make a critter and a habitat without imagination and making the journal and coloring it. Also, I really liked the cultures of Mr. Foster and I learned that his culture is really important to us and I liked his altar and what I heard from black wolf and the government and his people. I also enjoyed that they both came and gave us an opportunity to do this project.

And these are the things that I liked about when they came.
