EFFECT OF AMENDMENT:

BACKGROUND:

Oregon law currently centralizes authority over information systems security of most Executive Branch entities with the Office of the State Chief Information Officer (SCIO). The Legislative and Judicial Branches remain independently responsible for their own information systems security, along with a handful of statewide elected offices: the Secretary of State, the State Treasurer, and the Attorney General.

Senate Bill 106 brings information systems security of the Secretary of State's and the State Treasurer's offices within the ambit of the SCIO.
