Yefrosinia (Frosia) Borshch

Relationship to Margaryta Smolyanska: Great-great-grandmother

Yefrosinia Borshch survived Holodomor but lost 10 family members to forced starvation

Family members who died in 1933:

Olena (her mother)

Ivan (her brother) as well as his wife and four out of their five children

Andrey (her brother) as well as his wife and their daughter Natalya

Tyhyn Metla (husband of Yefrosinia Borshch)

Relationship to Margaryta Smolyanska: Great-great-grandfather

Tyhyn survived Holodomor but his refusal to follow the Communist Party orders to take away the entire harvest from the peasants cost him his career and almost his life

Tyhyn was the Head of the local collective farm

He refused to expropriate all the available food from the people in his area and give it to the Soviet authorities, believing there was a mistake in the order

Tyhyn was declared “enemy of the people”, put in prison, and sentenced to death

He was saved by a close friend with connections to the high ranking members of the Communist Party

Tyhyn was released from prison but was ordered to never leave the town of Nizhyn as long as he lived
