

From the Desk of Senator Brian Boquist

Donald Trump's win means the Supreme Court is potentially back in play — and that federal gun control is likely off the table (for now).

But that's not stopping powerful anti-gun billionaires from spending millions of dollars to pass even more restrictive gun control laws at the state and local level. (Especially in historically pro-gun states like Washington, Oregon, and Nevada.)

To stop those attacks, every pro-gun patriot — like YOU — will need to stand up for your Second Amendment rights at every opportunity.

Our FPC monthly members form the foundation of our organization. They help provide the monthly financial resources we need to successfully lobby and organize for the defense of the Second Amendment.

Will you consider becoming a FPC monthly member with a $10, $25, or $50 monthly donation? To show our appreciation, we'll send you some sweet gear:

SILVER	GOLD	PLATINUM
Donate $10 a month and receive our FPC official member package (two member decals & member card)	Donate $25 a month and receive the FPC official member package plus our FPC official member badge.	Donate $50 a month and receive the FPC official member package and badge, plus a FPC t-shirt.

Watch the short video below to hear our chief lobbyist, Craig DeLuz, explain the value of an FPC membership and why he needs YOU on his team:

Join FPC Today!

Local Republicans struggle with possibility of Trump nomination

Bianca Graulau, KXTV 11:42 PM. PST February 29, 2016

SACRAMENTO, Calif. - Craig DeLuz and Ryan Brown are both active in politics and passionate about conservative values. They're also both starting to consider the possibility of Donald Trump being the Republican nominee.

"My philosophy is 'ABT', anybody but Trump," DeLuz, a Republican strategist, said.

He's a former California Assembly candidate and Tea Party enthusiast. DeLuz said he would rather stay home on election day, than vote for Trump.

"I could not stay a registered Republican if Donald Trump were to be the nominee," DeLuz said, "and I honestly believe I'm not alone."

He's not, but in California he's part of a minority of Republicans. A Public Policy Institute of California poll found that more than half of Republicans have a favorable view of Trump.

"It's harmful to our political landscape," Ryan Brown, chair of the Sacramento State College Republicans, said about Trump's rhetoric.

But if it comes down to it, Brown will give him his vote.

"Even in the general election I would look on a Trump presidency much more favorably than a Clinton or Sanders presidency," Brown said.

It's no secret that California is a blue state. In a general election, a vote for Trump in California may not mean much.

But for someone like Brown, who would like to see Ohio governor John Kasich win the Republican nomination, or like DeLuz who thinks the current Republican front runner is dividing the party, the 2016 election is heading down a disappointing path.

Craig DeLuz guest speaker at Tea Party

Director of Legislative and Public Affairs for

Firearms Policy Coalition