BACKGROUND:

Over 6,500 apprentices currently work in the State of Oregon under the Apprenticeship and Training Division at the Bureau of Labor and Industries (BOLI). Apprenticeships provide supervised on-the-job training experience with classroom instruction. Information about apprenticeships is typically available on the BOLI website as well as at BOLI offices locations, local schools, community colleges and the Oregon Employment Department offices. Typically apprenticeship positions are also listed in local newspapers and advertised at community organizations.

House Bill 3340-A requires the Oregon Department of Education provide materials, in written or electronic form, on apprenticeship opportunities to high schools, and requires that high schools distribute this information when higher education materials are being presented to students.
