

Qualified immunity

All police departments in Oregon have lost the public's trust, in part due to their dependence on qualified immunity. They are able to act aggressively, extrajudicially, and without remorse—I have seen it first hand many times in the last three months. In nearly all cases, the police are lying when they say this force was necessary, and this is why qualified immunity needs to be reined in now. The people are not in the streets for nothing; the people want real change, and this is a good place to start. Only after material victories have been won by the public will the protests end.
