No amendment.

BACKGROUND:

Current Oregon law requires employers with 25 or more employees to allow an employee a 30-minute rest period to express milk during each four-hour period to be taken approximately in the middle of the work period. The employee is required, if feasible, to time the rest periods to express milk to coincide with rest periods and meal periods otherwise provided. The Fair Labor Standards Act does not place limits on the frequency and duration of rest periods to express milk. The federal provisions are limited to the first year after the child's birth; Oregon law extends the provisions to 18 months. There is no requirement that the rest periods to express milk be paid when they extend beyond the time the employer is required to provide paid rest periods.

House Bill 2593 requires all employers to provide reasonable rest periods for employees to express milk as often and as long as needed for the child's first 18 months. The measure removes the exemption for employers who claim providing such rest periods would impose an undue hardship on business operations.
