BACKGROUND:

Collective bargaining is the negotiation process between an employer and a representative of employees to determine employment conditions. In Oregon, the Public Employee Collective Bargaining Act (PECBA), enacted by the Oregon legislature in 1973, governs collective bargaining between public employers, such as school districts, and their employees. Under PECBA, public employers and labor organizations are required to bargain collectively in good faith with respect to employment relations, which are defined as including, but is not limited to, monetary benefits, hours, vacations, sick leave, grievance procedures and other conditions of employment. Oregon law specifically excludes class size from the definition of employment relations for school district bargaining. Under current law, school boards and employee unions may bargain on subjects outside the defined scope of employment relations, but they are not required to do so.

Senate Bill 764 amends the definition of employment relations to include class size and caseload limits for school district bargaining, making these areas mandatory collective bargaining subjects.

Oregon law requires the Oregon Department of Education (ODE) to report annually on class size. In 2018, ODE reported Oregon public schools had a mean class size of 25 students in the 2016-2017 school year, with a total of 23,958 teachers regularly assigned to 553,492 students in kindergarten through grade 12 classes.
