Dear Chair Dembrow,

The regulation of dairies by limiting the number of cows a dairy farm has or regulations in regards to how a the dairy farm conducts business is un necessary to say the least. More regulation continues to lead to more inefficiencies.

These farms that are currently operating and are outside of these regulations would be effected negatively with no apparent positive outcome in mind.

Farming and dairy farming do not need more government regulation and these two bills set a dangerous precedent to continue to see government interference when there is no need.

Sincerely,

Sean Wells
