

I think SB 978 is an overkill of what we are looking for in gun control. We as citizens of this state and country have the right to own and bear arms, with certain requirements in place before they can be purchased or used. Enforcing the existing laws should be more than adequate to protect the average citizen and their rights. As with everything else we will always have a percentage of people that will circumvent the law the same as those with drivers license or any other license breaks the law. Our focus, should be on not restricting with more regulation, but enforcing the existing laws. I realize that more regulation makes you feel good and think you have accomplished something but all you will do is push more law abiding citizens towards non compliance.

Do you really think someone living in high crime area will keep their firearm locked up in one of your contraptions when they are home, I don't think so! and why would they? Your amendment forces this individual into breaking the law to protect themselves, really is that what you want? It certainly is not what I want.

We as a people can never eliminate all killings from guns no more that we can eliminate all deaths on the highway or deaths from knives or any other means of killing, but we can focus on education about firearms just as we have done with drivers education classes, which was a big help to drivers.

I would suggest that you think long and hard before trying to enact these regulations, they are not right and will force more people into non compliance. VOTE NO

Joe