

Nay,

I want to understand your thinking on some of these Bill's. I agree with proper storage of firearms dont get me wrong. But how do you see it being a resonable idea that if someone breaks into my house or vehicle, steals my firearm then goes and commits a crime, that I am responsible for this crime? That's like saying someone steals your credit card, goes and buys alchohol, then kills or injures someone that we can hold you accountable for the crimes committed. How about this scenario,cars kill more people than guns do, so if someone steals your car then uses your car in a crime we should hold you accountable for the crimes that the criminal committed?

When are you going to stop blaming a object(firearm) and start holding indavduals accountable for the actions and crimes they are committing?

I hope you take the time to actually read this and ask your self a few questions.

Do you blame the car when a drunk driver kills someone?

What if a stolen credit card bought the alcohol, do you blame the victim of the stolen credit card?
