BACKGROUND:

In Oregon, individuals who are accused of a crime and awaiting trial, who are awaiting sentencing and transportation to a prison, who have violated their probation, or who have been convicted of a misdemeanor or sentenced to less than a year are detained in local and regional correctional facilities commonly referred to as jails. Additionally, current statutes require local jail facilities to house and transport federal prisoners and charge the sheriff with prisoner's safekeeping under federal requirements. ORS 169.540;169.530.

In each of the 36 counties in Oregon, the Sheriff is the chief law enforcement officer. Among his or her responsibilities is the operation of a jail. ORS 135.215. Oregon law requires jails to comply with statewide standards. ORS 169.076; ORS 169.620. Further, jails must be inspected on a regular basis by county commissioners and grand juries, ORS 132.440 and ORS 169.040, and the Department of Corrections also has authority to inspect them. ORS 169.070.

Recent reports have found that jails are under resources, that data on Oregon's jails and jail population is lacking, and that jails are failing to provide the medical and mental health care their populations require. This has led to an increase in inmate deaths in recent years, the most common cause being suicide, and incomplete data that prohibits officials from understand those deaths and the conditions in Oregon's jails generally.

Under federal law, the majority of individuals held in jail are ineligible for Medicaid, otherwise known as the Oregon Health Plan. 42 U.S.C. § 1396d and although the Bureau of Justice Statistics collects data on Mortality in
