Dear Joint Committee on Student Success,

This was a comment from a Facebook memory that popped up today from 1 year ago. This seemed an appropriate place to share this.

The last 2 months of school are always crazy, emotional, stressful, and frustrating. But also every year, during this same 2 months, things like this happen. Students who thank you for pushing them and believing in them when they weren't so sure. Students who trust you enough to share significant struggles in their personal lives, then ask for you to help them be accountable. Students who fully invest themselves in a math project and are pouring more effort into this than the first 7 months combined. Those are the moments that reinforce why teachers choose this career. Why we stick with it amidst classes sizes of 35-40 (in remedial classes), huge funding problems, and feeling significantly undervalued. Because of our students Please vote Yes for The Student Success Act, HB 3427.
