BACKGROUND:

Current law requires anyone hauling more than 20 bales of hay on a public highway to have possession of a transportation certificate signed by the producer or the agent of the producer. Failure to do so is considered a crime and is a Class C misdemeanor. This requirement originally assisted in preventing the theft of hay bales that, at the time, generally weighed 75-90 pounds. Theft of bales was prevalent due to their size, weight, and ease of access. Today, the average hay bale weighs typically 1,000 pounds and requires specialized equipment in the field to move. The change in industry, proponents of the measure say, has eliminated the need for additional regulation on the transport of hay designed to prevent theft.

Senate Bill 509 removes the requirement that anyone hauling more than 20 bales of hay on a public highway to have possession of a transportation certificate signed by the producer or the agent of the producer.
