BACKGROUND:

Court Appointed Special Advocates (CASA) are volunteers appointed by courts to advocate on behalf of abused and neglected children. They investigate, examine, and recommend the best options to a court, for a child to be safe, have a permanent home, and to thrive. CASAs spend the majority of their time interviewing people involved in the child's life and the case, including teachers, foster parents, attorneys, caseworkers, counselors, parents, medical professionals, and family members to determine the facts and circumstances of the child's situation.

CASAs receive approximately 40 hours of in-depth training through their local CASA Volunteer Program. Upon completion, all volunteers are sworn in by a local judge and may be assigned to cases. CASA supervisors provide guidance and support to volunteers for the duration of each case.
