Money, money money. It's always; "That will cost us." and "How much is that going to cost us?" Yup. It will cost us, and the longer we wait to start the serious clean-up needed for our survival the more it will cost us. Unless we wait too long and reach that point when no amount of our effort or money will save us.

When your garden has been left and overgrown with weeds, blackberry bushes and poison oak, and we've thrown garbage, old tires and mattresses on it for years, you can't expect to restore it with a few flower seeds.

A massive nuclear war would be as destructive, but because this extinction level event won't happen with a push of a button you think you can ignore it - that somehow it's not real. We are mired in quicksand directly in the path of an avalanche of filth and toxic waste closing in on us, and our children are standing with us. A train moving at 5 mph will kill you just as dead as one going 70 mph.

If your child's life was in peril, but you could save them with all your money and efforts, would you? It is and you should. This is exactly why we form collective agreements - like democracy. Together we build a barn, construct highways, defend our nation and save our world. Important challenges of your job include discerning the right direction for the good of all, and leading others in that grand effort. Be brave. Accept the mission to save humanity.
