Re: Measure 110

Chair Prozanski, Vice Chair Thatcher and members of the committee,

My name is Ron Williams; I serve as Outreach Director for the Oregon Health Justice Recovery Alliance (HJRA), and am one of the Tri-Chairs of the Measure 110 Oversight & Accountability Council (OAC). I am also a person in long term recovery. I consider myself lucky to be able to work on behalf of these two great organizations, and for a cause that is deeply meaningful to me.

HJRA was formed following the passage of Measure 110; our work is centered around the implementation of Measure 110, the Drug Addiction Treatment & Recovery Act. We're focused on investing in the communities that have been most harmed by the war on drugs — Black, Latinx, Native, Indiginous, and tribal communities.

For far too long people of color and low-income Oregonians have been overrepresented in the criminal justice system and underrepresented in the healthcare system. But we're working on changing that. Oregon is writing the playbook for how to successfully transition away from criminalizing addiction to treating it as the health issue it is. The HJRA represents more than 75 community-based organizations across the state, all of which have deep knowledge and experience serving their local communities. Alliance members include medical associations, culturally-specific organizations, labor groups, harm reduction and addiction recovery providers, advocates and people in recovery.

As you've heard from other testimony today, the new law is in good hands under the stewardship of the Oversight & Accountability Council and the Oregon Health Authority. We recognize that when it comes to truly addressing Oregon's addiction crisis we have a long road ahead, but it's a hopeful path forward.

The first round of Measure 110 grants were awarded this summer, immediately infusing our behavioral health system with $30 million in urgently needed funds to help address the overdose and addiction crisis in Oregon. (A full list of grantees is included with this testimony.) Grants are being utilized for harm reduction services, peer support services, housing and treatment for people with Substance Use Disorder (SUD). I'd like to share just a few examples of how these funds are already making a difference:

- Bridges to Change provides housing, treatment, and peer support to people with Substance Use Disorder. Thanks to the Measure 110 grant they received, they were able to keep a recovery house in The Dalles open. The house was set to close and its staff to be laid off, all due to a lack of funding. This would have presented a hardship on multiple levels. People wouldn't have been able to access local recovery support, the organization would have lost key staff members with strong local relationships, and it would have set the organization back in their multi-years effort to establish services in Wasco County. Thanks to Measure 110 funds, Bridges to Change was able to not only keep the recovery house open, but to expand services to serve more people in the community.
- Measure 110 funds are also supporting the CCC Recovery Hotel. NARA and Central City Concern worked together to create culturally-specific housing opportunities for African American, Latinx and Native American community members. The hotel will be able to serve 70 people at a time, providing residents access to behavioral health care, addiction recovery services, and help finding a job and permanent housing.
- A grant to the Oregon Washington Health Network helped increase access to recovery peer support and housing in Umatilla County. Umatilla County still lacks many of the needed components for comprehensive substance abuse treatment, and funding from Measure 110 will help address that.

These are just a few examples of Measure 110's early impact across the state. In total, 70 organizations in 26 Counties were funded with grants and amended contracts. Out of these grants:

- 33 organizations were able to expand access to treatment services for indigent and uninsured individuals;
- 52 organizations were able to hire additional peer support specialists
- 32 service providers were able to add recovery, supportive and transitional housing; and
- 30 organizations were able to increase harm reduction and overdose prevention services.

In addition to working with stakeholders and communities to provide input on rulemaking, supporting providers in the grant process, and continuing our work with legislators, the Health Justice Recovery Alliance is focusing on community outreach. We are working our way across the state to make sure folks know about the new law and the opportunities it provides to expand addiction services in their local communities. We are meeting with local governments, initially focusing on county commissioners, and Local Public Safety Coordinating Councils (LPSCCs) and local public health officials. So far our team has met with officials from Lane, Clackamas, Multnomah, Washington, Lincoln, Wasco, Crook, Deschutes, Coos, Douglas, Klamath, and Umatilla Counties. We've also begun work on a tribal outreach plan.

We have made significant progress in a period of a few months. But we also recognize that it's going to take time before all of these important services are made available to all who need them, throughout the state. Measure 110 is a huge system shift, and such systemic changes don't happen overnight. We're in it for the long haul, and are committed to doing all we can to ensure that the core principles, values and outcomes of the law are implemented fully.

Thank you for the opportunity to provide testimony on this important issue.
