

Hello,

I am suggesting that deathcare be included in universal healthcare. This would include the basic needs for an individual's death including transportation of the deceased, and final disposition (cremation, burial, etc).

Healthcare facilities are already working closely with deathcare workers. There is so much crossover between the two industries already, it doesn't make sense for to consider them separate.

In the same way that unexpected or large medical bills can be a huge burden on someone, death care bills to a grieving family can add more trauma to their experience after a loved one passes.

Dying is something everyone does without any exceptions. Deathcare is a basic need that should be accessible to everyone.

Thank you,
Petra
