

As has been shown in other States an independent commission to conduct redistricting provides an accountable, transparent, and equitable process to what has been a purely partisan exercise. The current process-which I see now BOTH parties are trying to use to redo District 2-is not inclusive , does not reflect the diversity of citizens, is nothing other than the tired old partisan play, and puts party interests above all other interests.

It is the people, not the party, that should develop redistricting maps.

Honestly, how can you defend the current way of dividing political spoils?

It's We the People, not Wee the Party.

Thomas Wright

Sent from Mail for Windows 10