BACKGROUND:

According to a 2021 RAND report, prescription drug prices in the United States average 2.56 times those seen in 32 other nations. The disparity is especially prevalent for brand-name drugs where prices in the United States average 3.44 times those in comparison nations.

In 2019, Maryland became the first state to establish a Prescription Drug Affordability Board (PDAB). The PDAB takes inspiration from states' regulation of consumer payment rates for essential services, such as clean drinking water, safe and consistent electricity, and public transportation, where states act to ensure that these necessary services are affordable to the public. Eight other states (Arizona, Colorado, Minnesota, New Jersey, New Mexico, Rhode Island, and Virginia) are currently considering establishing PDABs.

Senate Bill 844 establishes a Prescription Drug Affordability to review prescription drug prices and establish upper payments for specified categories of drugs.
