

As the 2020 Census has been completed and 're-districting' is in the process of being considered – it is my strongest hope that we well take the politicians out of the process and put together a non-partisan commission to redraw the lines.

The commission should be made up of equal numbers of dems, repubs, independents, unaffiliated, League of Women's voters, etc so that legislators aren't involved at all in drawing the district lines. This would certainly remove the appearance of either/any party unduly influencing the final draft. It is apparent that the finger-pointing/blame game rhetoric is fierce and has clouded legitimate issues in which we, the People, need to consider and have a voice.

I respectfully request that you would consider this option.

Andrea Gray
Redmond, OR 97756