No amendment.

BACKGROUND:

The Attorney General provides legal counsel to state agencies and represents the State in court. The Attorney General may employ special legal assistants or private counsel when appropriate to protect the interest of the state and may also appoint special counsel when representing more than one agency and the circumstance would create or tend to create a conflict of interest. An "agency of state government" as defined by ORS 174.112 includes all elected officers other than judges, all boards, commissions, departments, and divisions within the executive branch and certain entities created by the executive branch to give advice.

House Bill 2214 prohibits paying outside counsel a rate of more than 200 percent of the standard hourly rate charged by the Attorney General or a rate established by the Attorney General for this purpose unless the agency has made available a public statement justifying the cost.
