BACKGROUND:

House Bill 3079-A makes three changes to the Oregon Credit Union Act. Credit unions are not-for-profit financial cooperatives that return benefits to their members in the form of lower fees, higher interest rates on savings and checking accounts, and lower interest rates on loans. Credit union members elect directors and officials who establish the operational policies of the institution. Credit unions in Oregon may be chartered under federal laws, the laws of another state, or Oregon laws. House Bill 3079-A provides state-chartered credit unions the same powers that are available to federally chartered credit unions as of the effective date of this Act without approval of the director of the Department of Consumer and Business Services (DCBS).

A credit union is allowed to invest up to five percent of its assets in stock, membership units or ownership interests in, or loans, to a corporation, limited liability company, or mutual association if the entity is "primarily" (i.e., majority) owned by credit unions or organizations of credit unions (CUSOs). House Bill 3079-A deletes the requirement that the entity invested in be primarily owned by a credit union or CUSO.

Under current law, a state-chartered credit union can merge with another credit union under the existing charter of that credit union, with the approval of the DCBS Director. Given the statutory limits as to who can be a member of a particular credit union (i.e., the credit union's field of membership), the merged credit union's field of membership must be compatible with the credit union it is merging with. House Bill 3079-A allows the DCBS Director to approve the merger of two credit unions without regard to their fields of membership if one credit union is insolvent or is in danger of insolvency and if additional specified criteria are met.
