- Similar legislation in other states
- Concerns about militarization of law enforcement
- Types of federal surplus programs
- Law enforcement use of armored vehicles

EFFECT OF AMENDMENT:

Replaces the measure.

BACKGROUND:

Nationwide, many law enforcement agencies receive grants for personnel, training, and equipment from the federal government. These grants, or internal agency funds, can be used to purchase equipment directly from federal agencies. Other federal programs allow agencies to receive surplus equipment for free through agencies such as the Defense Logistics Agency (DLA). The DLA manages surplus military equipment and supplies for the United States Department of Defense and has been authorized by Congress to transfer certain equipment to state and local law enforcement agencies. According to the DLA's website, it is prohibited from transferring equipment such as tanks, large caliber weapons and munitions, body armor, and explosives or pyrotechnics. Still, it may be possible for law enforcement agencies to purchase or receive this equipment from other federal agencies, including the United States Departments of Justice and Homeland Security, or through commercial sources.

House Bill 2481 A prohibits law enforcement agencies in Oregon from receiving certain surplus military equipment and requires agencies purchasing any surplus military equipment to receive permission from their relevant governing body or agency director, provide notification, and use only state or local funds.
