BACKGROUND:

According to the U.S. Department of Education, roughly one quarter of undergraduate students nationwide are also raising children. Rates of timely graduation for these student parents tend to be much lower than average. Student parents are also more likely to be women than men, to be older than nonparent students, and to attend community colleges rather than four-year universities.

Senate Bill 564 A requires the collection of data on student parents at Oregon's public colleges and universities.
