

Racist history is important but more important is the importance of each individual. All individuals need to know that they have equal rights. They need to know how to effectively defend those rights in society. They need to know how to make use of those rights to enjoy participation in society.

Dredging up history, encouraging resentment and hatred, and robbing resources from programs that could accomplish genuine improvement in addressing societal inequities seems foolish. It would be stirring up resentment while spending resources that could be better applied to the perceived inequities.
