I don't see how this is even an issue. Why couldn't a Native American wear traditional clothing to a graduation? This is just another form of discrimination that has been allowed for far too long. We need to rid ourselves of ridicules and outdated regulations that were put in place to keep people of color down. How does the clothing a graduating student wear affect the anything in the school? The school doesn't stop girls from wearing skimpy clothing showing off their bodies or guys from wearing old, sleeveless shirts and shorts, so why can't a Native American wear something that is elegant, traditional, respectful for women or men, and something that depicts Indigenous culture in a positive manner?

Native Americans have endured so much BS since colonization destroyed almost everything that made their cultures unique and incredibly beautiful. Since the beginning of the rape of this country, white people have done everything in their power to destroy anything and everything regarding people of color. From their religions, traditions, ways of life, family structure, government, everything!!! The reason many people of color are in such dire straights today is because of the hundreds of years of race destruction and thousands of regulations created to keep those groups struggling.

When is enough enough?? When do people start using their moral compass and stop the horrible, down right despicable treatment toward other people who are different? History will judge this generation, and all previous, in a manner that sheds a negative light on white people who can't let go of manifest destiny thinking and treat other how they want to be treated.

I fully support allowing Native Americans to wear their traditional clothing to a graduation that is housed in a public building and institution paid for by tax dollars. I also support regulation reform that gives equal rights to people of color.
