

Hello,

My child was identified as TAG very early in elementary school. Our school generally did the best they could at providing her support when needed. Unfortunately, in third grade, the writing teacher made students cry. My kid complained, but nothing was done. It took about four years for her to enjoy writing again, though she still struggles to this day.

A study of TAG curriculum could provide teachers with better tools to serve our youth. One of the tools provided to my kid was a set of books. She tried a few and did not like them. I think very few kids utilized this resource. If a good study is conducted, it will include how well and often resources are used. This could save time and money as well as increase joy during school.

I hope you will pass this bill in hopes of identifying more TAG kids.

Thank you.
