

As an educator and parent, I ask that you continue to support TAG education in schools. All classrooms should be stimulating for students and teachers alike! It's essential that schools/classrooms provide a rich and nourishing learning environment for all children that supports their passions and strengths. How are we differentiating learning so that all students are challenged? I believe all students have strengths. How do we create learning environments that help students discover their unique strengths/gifts? I'm not in support of separating out the "bright" students from the "average". It's not a division based on IQ...It's about responsive teaching.
