

Racism, at its core, is a destructive social force on the health of those who experience it. The real, day-to-day effects of this country's and state's long history of racism will not be eliminated until the institutions in our society address it with serious urgency. Collecting data is critical to addressing the racial injustices that exist within the state of Oregon.