

As the General Manager of (3) medium duty truck dealerships, we have constantly battled after hours intruders and thefts. With the homeless crisis boom, this battle has expanded the need for businesses to protect their property and the property of their customers. After the final straw of being broken into one night and having $21,000 worth of catalytic converters cut off new trucks, we decide to opt for an electric fence. Since installation we haven't had any issues. While local cities continue to do less and less to curb the homeless problem and theft and issues that go with it, I believe business owners should have the ability to protect their investments.
