

I have lived in Williams, Oregon for over 40 years. Our vibrant rural community has long valued our minuscule, bathroom-less library as a lifeline for books for kids and adults and access to the Internet. Libraries are technology hubs in rural communities, and provide technical support which is also part of overcoming the digital divide. Josephine Community Libraries has current plans to fundraiser to build a new library for Williams. These funds would be a huge lift towards achieving this long sought goal.
