

I cannot stress how much I'd like to see the health care system revamped so everyone was covered. I'm willing to spend considerably more taxes than I already do to ensure this comes about. It's imperative to our state's well being.

And look at it this way: If we don't do anything about the health care system, we are consigning our children to suffer the slings and arrows of fate if they get hurt or sick. What happens when the next plague hits us? What happens when something worse than COVID comes about. Do we really want to try to beat it back haphazard like we've been doing? Or do we want to crush it right out of the starting gate?
