

Hello!

I want to write in that I feel this bill is too broad and not refined in definition. And thank I believe it is trying to regulate something that the government should have no say in! This relates more to spiritual activities and as long as practitioners are honest about their education and experiences presented, it is the choice of the person engaging those activities to decide whether it is worthwhile. I also feel this unfairly forces a colonial mindset of "higher education" as a superior model over life experiences. Why or how could a White man's college, hold superiority over an Indigenous person's culture? Or a BIPOC experiences around trauma or uplift? This excludes people of lower financial abilities and women. This sounds like some white Patriarchy to me, and absolutely unnecessary and the wrong approach to a perceived problem. Like really?!!! Having barely escaped losing my home and possessions to the Almeda fire in S. Oregon, and this is where your priorities are?!!! Shame on you. This is a serious letdown and just an absurd focus of legislation!
