

I've worked as a Healing Arts Professional for a decade providing life coaching, reiki, guided meditation, yoga and other alternative therapies to clients including Therapists who hold licenses with the state. They mention often that they don't receive these types of transformations or depth in much of the work that they have studied through their 3,000 hours. I have over 10,000 hours of yoga education and I'm a 500 E-RYT Yoga Teacher Trainer that's worked very hard and invested over $50,000 in trainings. I have 5 star reviews on Yelp and Google though my years working as a professional with countless benefits that clients have received from these services. I feel it would be best to open up a dialogue and forum and invite those who are receiving these services to hear how their emotional, mental, physical and energetic states are shifting from ancient wisdom traditions and practices that are well established much longer than our Western medical system which is so new. I believe in our Western Medical system for the strengths and incredible wisdoms it holds, yet find it hard to understand why 5000+ year old practices are not held in the same regard. Would you be open to a bigger dialogue versus an out right discrimination against all alternative therapies? And what's the main reason this is happening? I'd like to hear what standards could be better created vs just a hard fast line that doesn't include the clients of any of these practiced professionals.
